

One-Room School Program SELF-GUIDED ACTIVITY

There's nothing students understand better than school. So treat them to a bit of educational time travel by stepping into the shoes of kids living in the 1800s. Reserve a day in the rustic Miller or McGuffey schoolhouses. No more whiteboards or projection screens. Instead, your class will use McGuffey Readers. And you get into the picture, too, teaching lessons that were the basis of 19th-century education and drawing comparisons to the modern day. The "One-Room School Teacher Guide" is downloadable online. It's filled with historical background and suggestions on what you can do before, during and after your visit. There are curriculum connections, too, and a full bibliography.
